Differences Make US Better!

April is Autism Awareness Month

This is my sixth year of sharing information related to persons with invisible disabilities. April is Autism Awareness month and every April. I am reminded of how blessed I am to take care of a person with autism. I am also reminded of how blessed our daughter is to have a strong family who supports her UNIQUE abilities. I have come to the firm understanding that the most important gift you can give to a person living with Autism is tolerance.

One of the videos I am highlighting below is from Haley Moss. I met her during Covid through the Florida Bar Association. At the time, I just wanted her to share her story and understand how she has been able to navigate the world. However, over the years, she has been a constant reference and a beacon of light for me as I tried to understand the challenges my daughter was going through during her development.

Haley is an exceptional advocate and story teller. Her insight is crucial to understanding persons with indivisible disabilities and how we as a society support them.

Healthcare and education are a significant part of everyone's life, but for persons on the spectrum, they spend an extraordinary amount of time with physicians, therapists, specialists, and teachers.

The next video was done at Johns Hopkins All Children's Hospital. The team of experts there took time to explain, what autism is, how it's diagnosed, and some of the resources that support this population.

Finally to understand the evolution of the movement it is worth viewing the documentary Crip Camp. The film highlights the "why" and importance of creating federal law to address equity.
